"MEDIUM SPIRITS"

SPEED COMEDY NO. 2

A REGGIE MORRIS PRODUCTION

S Y N O P S I S

The Duffy Household is run on the European plan -- always fighting! With mother an "Ouija Board Fan" doing her utmost to convert her daughter Charlotte to the ways of Spiritualism much to the disgust of Daddy Duffy, whose only spirits are bottled up in the cellar.

Accidentally Mother Duffy finds a locket which she feels quite positive Daddy Duffy intends for her birthday gift, but she decides not to refer to the matter, fearing it might spoil his pleasure at surprising her.

Charlotte and her Sweetheart Jay (who is not popular with Duffy by any means) have a suspicion that Duffy is over-interested in the maid. They consult "Ouija", learning that "Duffy does like the chickens", and indeed he does for we find him bargaining with the maid, offering her the locket in return for a kiss. While this is happening, Charlotte and her Sweetheart, Jay, are busy questioning "Ouija" regarding the father's actions.

In the course of events the mother gets impatient waiting for Duffy to present her with the locket, and finally requests it of him. He in turn cheerfully lies, explaining that the locket has been stolen from its case. The mother telephones her trance-medium for assistance, and immediately he arrives in the form of Jack Ackroyd, accompanied by a few more frauds who are his assistants.

Ackroyd and his pals fake up a spirits meeting, acting as the spirits themselves, and fool the mother into thinking that the shade of Napoleon is in love with her and Cleopatra is jealous.

While the spirits are busy trying to locate the missing locket, Jay buys it back from the maid and slips it to Duffy who presents it to his wife. Jay makes a favorable impression on Duffy after this act, and thus ends the picture.
